A Md., home. The VA initially disclosed the burglary May 22, saying it involved the names, birth dates and Social Security numbers — and in some cases, disability codes — of veterans discharged since 1975.

Since then, it also has acknowledged after an internal investigation that the data could also include phone numbers and addresses of those veterans, as well as the personal information for up to 50,000 active Navy and National Guard personnel.

In their lawsuit, the veterans groups say VA Secretary Jim Nicholson and other VA officials were at fault for the theft, which occurred even though the agency's inspector general warned every year since 2001 that access controls were weak.

The suit also said the VA acted irresponsibly by failing to publicize the burglary after the data analyst promptly told his supervisors on May 3. During congressional hearings last month, VA Inspector General George Opfer said his office didn't learn of the crime until May 10 — and only through office gossip.

The veterans cite in part violations of a 1974 federal privacy law, which generally requires agencies to have protections to prevent the unauthorized disclosure of personal information.

Once the interior fencing has been installed, perimeter fencing will be removed and the property will become accessible to the public. Work on the interior fencing is expected to be completed by June 30.
